House Democrats unveil Trump impeachment charges; White House sets sights on Senate trial

Democrats in the U.S. House of Representatives announced formal impeachment charges against President Donald Trump on Tuesday, a historic move that set the stage for a divisive trial in the Republican-led Senate ahead of the 2020 elections.

The two formal charges, or articles of impeachment, accuse Trump of "betraying" the country by abusing power in an effort to pressure Ukraine to probe a political rival and then obstructing Congress' investigation into the scandal.

The Democratic-controlled House is almost certain to vote to impeach the president. It could take up the matter next week. A trial would then be held in the Senate, likely in January. No Republican in either the House or Senate has come out in favor of Trump's removal from office.

House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler told reporters that Democrats had to take action because Trump had endangered the U.S. Constitution, undermined the integrity of the 2020 election and jeopardized national security.

"No one, not even the president, is above the law," Nadler said at a news conference to announce the formal impeachment charges. He was joined by House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and other Democratic leaders involved in the impeachment probe.

"Our elections are a cornerstone of democracy. ... The integrity of our next election is at risk from a president who has already sought foreign interference in the 2016 and 2020 elections," Nadler said.

Trump has denied wrongdoing and calls the inquiry a hoax.

The White House, which has refused to participate in the hearings in the House because it says the process is unfair, accused Democrats of en-dent Bill Clinton was impeached in 1998 for lying about a sexual relationship he had with a White House intern, but he was acquitted in the Senate. Republican President Richard Nixon resigned in 1974 before he was impeached over his involvement in the Watergate scandal. Democratic President Andrew Johnson was impeached in 1868 but gaging in a "baseless and partisan" attempt to undo the results of the 2016 election.

"The President will address these false charges in the Senate and expects to be fully exonerated, because he did nothing wrong," White House spokeswoman Stephanie Grisham said in a statement. In an interview with Fox News, Grisham, asked whether Trump would testify, said she did not know.

After the articles of impeachment were announced, Trump tweeted "WITCH HUNT!" Earlier, he attacked the impeachment effort, tweeting that to impeach a president when the country has such a strong economy "and most importantly, who has done NOTHING wrong, is sheer Political Madness!"

He is the fourth U.S. president to face impeachment.

Democratic Presi-

not convicted in the Senate.

The abuse of power charge accuses Trump of using nearly $400 million in U.S. security aid and a possible White House meeting with his Ukrainian counterpart to solicit Ukraine to publicly announce the investigations of Biden and a debunked theory that Ukraine, not Russia, interfered in the 2016 U.S. election.

The obstruction charge accuses the president of defying and impeding the House's efforts to investigate the scandal, adding that Trump would remain a threat to the U.S. Constitution if he remained in office.

Representative Adam Schiff, the Democrat who spearheaded the investigation in the House Intelligence Committee, said impeachment was an extraordinary remedy but that Trump had given Democrats no choice.

Environment protesters glue selves to UK PM's bus

Three environmental campaigners glued themselves to Prime Minister Boris Johnson's campaign bus on Tuesday after he held an election event at a factory in central England, two days before voters go to the polls. Extinction Rebellion UK - which disrupted public transport in London in October - said eight protesters, five dressed as bees, blocked the Conservative bus to call for faster progress in reducing greenhouse gas emissions. "We're here because every degree of warming matters, every minute matters, but by not acting today we're accelerating the most pressing crisis of our time," said one of the protesters, Becky McGee.

Questions mount over tours to New Zealand volcano

Tourists caught in the deadly blast at New Zealand's White Island were there despite a recent increase in volcanic activity, although experts said precise predictions on eruptions were all but impossible. Five people were killed, eight are still missing and more than 30 were injured when the White Island volcano, one of the most active in New Zealand, erupted in a steam and gas explosion on Monday. Many of the visitors were on a day tour from a nearby port. Geological hazard tracker GeoNet raised its alert level for the island near the middle of a six-point scale in mid-November because of an increase in volcanic activity. But tour companies were not required to keep their dozens of customers that day away from the volcano, operators and agencies say.

Iran ministry advises citizens not to visit America

Iran warned its citizens, particularly scientists, on Tuesday not to visit America, saying Iranians there were subjected to arbitrary and lengthy detention in inhuman conditions. "Iranian citizens, particularly elites and scientists, are requested to seriously avoid traveling to America, even to take part in scientific conferences and even having an invitation," a travel advisory on the foreign ministry website said. It cited, "America's cruel and one-sided laws toward Iranians, especially Iranian elites, and arbitrary and lengthy detention in completely inhuman conditions" as reasons for the travel advisory. The United States and Iran on Saturday swapped prisoners - American graduate student Xiyue Wang, detained for three years on spying charges, and imprisoned Iranian stem-cell researcher Massoud Soleimani. # Multiple killed in Jersey City shootout, including an officer

The gun battle unfolded in broad daylight, locking down schools and sending frantic pedestrians running for cover.

MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Six people were killed Tuesday in a horrific midday standoff that unleashed panic on the streets of Jersey City, New Jersey's second most populous city.

A police officer, three civilians and two suspected gunmen were killed in the melee, which lasted roughly an hour and prompted evacuations and a massive police response in the neighborhood, located just over the Hudson River near the Statue of Liberty.

Officials said they don't believe the shooting was terror-related, though as of deadline there was no official word on what provoked the bloodshed, nor was it known how many suspects were involved. Police did not say whether anyone was taken into custody in connection to the incident, and the identities of the deceased were not made public.

The fallen police officer was pronounced dead at a local hospital, and the other deceased, including two shooters, were found at JC Kosher Supermarket, located at 223 Martin Luther King Drive, between Bidwell and Bayview Avenues. NBC New York reported that the deceased officer was a married father of five.

The barrage of rapid succession gunfire first rang out around 12:30 p.m., with frantic witnesses describing hundreds of shots fired. One person on social media described the area as "a war zone." SWAT teams and federal agents rushed to the scene, as did the NYPD. Helicopters and drones surveyed the area from above.

Jersey City Mayor Steven Fulop gave an update on the standoff just before 4 p.m., saying there were "multiple deceased" people. Fulop described the scene at that time as "still active but secure," and said others were injured, including two officers who were struck by shrapnel.

"One of the officers tragically has given his life," Fulop said later on Twitter, and asked people to keep police in their prayers. Schools, including an elementary school in close proximity to the scene, were put on lockdown. Students were later released and no children were harmed.

Earlier, an officer was shot several blocks away, in Bayview Cemetery, Fulop said. Police were investigating whether the gunmen shot that officer before fleeing to the market, where they continued to fire through the building's windows. Local media reported that confrontation was connected to a previous homicide investigation.

NJ Transit suspended nearby rail and bus service on the west side of Jersey City.

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio addressed the tragedy on Twitter Tuesday, saying "the NYPD is closely monitoring the ongoing situation in Jersey City and we stand ready to assist in any way we can. Please keep our neighbors in Jersey City in your thoughts today, especially the brave officers and first responders going into harm's way to protect lives."

President Trump also tweeted about the situation, calling it a "horrific shootout."

"Our thoughts & prayers are w/ the victims & their families during this very difficult & tragic time. We will continue to monitor the situation as we assist local & state officials on the ground," Trump said.

Metro caught up with the stars of the final episode of the 'Star Wars' franchise.

RAYMUNDO ZAMARRIPA
MWN

Daisy Ridley, John Boyega and Oscar Isaac, stars of "Star Wars: Episode IX - The Rise of Skywalker," are entrusted to bring to fruition the end of the franchise, leading a cast supported by thousands of artists who worked on the film directed by J.J. Abrams.

Without a doubt, it was Ridley, in the role of Rey, who carried the heaviest burden in the development of "Episode IX" which, according to Isaac, has been the most physically and emotionally demanding story for Ridley.

"Yes, it was very demanding, but I also did things in this movie that I never thought I would be able to do, such as hanging on cables, turning and jumping very high in the air," Ridley said in an interview in Sao Paulo, Brazil.

"Rey doesn't walk at all in the movie," Boyega emphasized, in what might be a spoiler about the growth of Rey.

"Exactly. She just floated back and forth," Ridley agreed, without going into more detail.

For Ridley, the certainty of having a team of professionals that made her feel safe at all times allowed her to take her body to the limit on the set, as well as her mind, thanks to the guidance of Abrams.

"Emotionally, thanks to J.J., he made us feel very comfortable and safe on the set to try things and make mistakes and repeat, or whatever was necessary, it felt super rough but very satisfying," said

The face of a family of thousands

For the stars, the weekend of Dec. 19 will be crucial. Ridley, Boyega and Isaac will become the 'pilots' who will fly the ship for the last time with the dreams of millions of franchise fans.

"It feels incredible (to be the 'pilots'), but we are only the faces of the work of thousands of people, so we hope to do justice to all of them," said Ridley.

Flanked by her fellow actors, with whom she attended the Sao Paulo Comic Con, Ridley stressed the obligation of this galactic trio "to exalt the arduous path that each of the teams involved in the production of 'Episode IX' endured."

"Even if we haven't done the work of all of them, we really hope that fans can see all the work of those thousands of people that were involved in the movie," the 27-year-old actress insisted.

One way to recognize the work of all the people involved in the film (and to ensure that it becomes a box office success) would be to see it two or three times, the stars suggested.

"Maybe sometimes more than that," Isaac replied jokingly.

The 40-year-old Guatemalan actor acknowledged that he is living through a very big and emotional 'episode' in his life with the end of the "Star Wars" franchise, since he had gotten used to reuniting with his colleagues and with the members of the production team who are like family.

"It really feels like family, because you start seeing the same people over and over again and, for us, it has been almost seven years of being together, even with many of the same technicians."

"You really create bonds with the people you work with and you know that, even if you finish a movie, in a year you will be back on set. So now it is quite emotional to permanently close the story," said Isaac.

Seeing them face to face, it's obvious, as well as understandable, the good chemistry that exists between Ridley, Isaac and Boyega. Each one was just starting off in the industry and it was thanks to the "Star Wars" saga that their fame catapulted them to stars, as a team.

"It feels good to see how the story comes to an end, but it is a bittersweet feeling," said Boyega.

'The Crown': An original view of the royals through their wardrobe

CREATING A TIME

The decade changes for each character are subtle, but powerful in detail, especially in accessories or in certain colors and pieces. And this is what Amy Roberts took into account. "It was very important to make the transition from the postwar style to the '60s. Not just with miniskirts and free love, but color. That's why we gave the queen sugary and almond tones. Margaret is a little dirtier, darker. But who reflects the most interesting (in a very real personal style), is Princess Anne, the youngest royal. She wasn't going to dress in Carnaby Street style, but her vision of the '60s is very interesting," the costume designer tells Metro.

BUILDING A NEW QUEEN

In the first episode, Queen Elizabeth is stark. She defines herself as an "old bat" when analyzing her maturity, but adjusts her characteristic style to what the times demand, daring with the use of color and even with a seventies style tunic in the last episode. "When we researched we saw that there are lots of color photographs of her. In the first two seasons we had to recreate a style that led slightly to the '60s, but here, with it, we used color more openly. And look at their looks, they are extraordinary," Roberts says. "But we think about it all: in color. In the environments that were appropriate for each and also, another key was fabric. We looked for them in many stores." She adds: "In one episode the queen is far from her public duties and so her clothes are a little freer."

The series follows history rigorously, but also shows us the personality that Peter Morgan gave to the British royal family in his own universe. LUZ LANCHEROS MWN

Queen Elizabeth, interpreted masterfully by Oscar-winner Olivia Colman is the adult counterweight of complicated family relationships where the two older siblings, a tortured Charles and a strong and acid Anne (played by Josh O'Connor and Erin Doherty, respectively) take center stage.

"It was very important to make the transition ... to the '60s. Not just with miniskirts ... but color."

Amy Roberts, costume designer

ge. In this way, in the third season of "The Crown," the cast plays their roles masterfully in what Peter Morgan, the scriptwriter, does best: stick to history, but also narrate royalty from its human side, to the point of having the audience grow fond of it.

But costumes should also reflect the same, and Amy Roberts put special detail when investigating and in some cases copying exactly (for example Charles' coronation as Prince of Wales) some pieces, but always giving them her own twist.

MARGARET, THE DARK PRINCESS

In this season we see the princess in all her extravagance, but at her worst personal moment, wearing tiaras and colorful dresses, and, in turn, showing her fragility. "The queen is already established. Her marriage is resolved. Margaret was the opposite pole, her marriage was quite toxic and we wanted to point out that loss in her. That madness without direction, in slightly more extravagant fabrics. When she goes on tour to the United States she is elegant and extraordinary, she is a star, but he gets much sadder as the story progresses. And sometimes when you feel this way, you don't wear clothes that reflect it. You wear something that is the opposite of that. Sometimes you do that," Roberts explains.

MALE ROYALS: THE STYLE OF BRITISH GENTLEMAN

During the series, we see the extraordinary style of Lord "Dickie" Mountbatten, father figure of Philip and Charles (and last viceroy of India), as well as their style. Also that of the ill-fated – and exiled – Duke of Windsor, Edward VIII, in his time, a benchmark of elegance. But particularly, the husband and son of the queen followed this canon. "The main thing was to do it right. Both are incredibly elegant in that British aspect. Philip has very long clothes, so we made them as is and Charles has always seemed old since day one, so we wanted to achieve that fine British tailoring, the best. It was important for us to get it right," Amy Roberts concludes.

Bill Belichick was a focal point of the first Spygate saga in 2007.

GETTY IMAGES

PUNISHMENT COMING FOR PATRIOTS

If Bill Belichick ordered the Code Red on this one, then he is the dumbest genius in the history of God's green Earth.

After all of the off-field drama over the past 20 years, and with the rest of the football country outside of New England already believing that the Patriots are the dirtiest franchise this side of the 1919 Chicago White Sox, how could Belichick possibly repeat the mistake he made 12 years ago in the original Spygate saga?

I don't believe Belichick is that stupid. He's arrogant, for sure, but he's not that arrogant.

So the likelihood here is that either one of Belichick's coaching staff minions requested one of these Kraft Productions film guys to record the Bengals sidelines on Sunday, or (the most likely scenario) is that one of these film guys didn't think he was doing anything wrong.

The rest of the country won't buy the latter, but it does make the most sense from what we currently know about this whole ordeal.

OPINION

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is the Executive Sports Editor at Metro Newspapers and the Founder of MetroBet.us

Kraft Productions is said to have been filming a "Do Your Job" mini documentary on one of the Pats' advance scouts. What these advance scouts do is look at the sidelines of the teams they are scouting (with binoculars), and try to figure out patterns when it comes to personnel coming in and out of the game.

It would make sense if you were doing a documentary on an advance scout to show the viewer something along the lines of what he sees with those binoculars. According to The Athletic, whomever shot this piece of footage got eight minutes worth of the Cincinnati sideline.

Cool ... except that that's totally illegal.

The Patriots have already admitted fault in the matter, even though the person who shot this footage may have been contracted out and not an actual employee of the Patriots.

Who done it?

The conspiracy theories are already flying, as you would expect. One name that hasn't really been discussed yet is Stephen Belichick, who was shooed off the field in Buffalo by Sean McDermott earlier this year for lingering on the Bills sidelines before the game. Obviously, young Belichick wasn't in Cleveland on Sunday as he was in Foxboro coaching the Pats defense. But would it be possible that Lil' Belichick talked with one of these film production dudes ahead of time to try and get some intel on Bengals personnel tendencies?

One interesting angle to this whole thing is that the Bengals have a brand new head coach in Zac Taylor. Bill Belichick has novels of back history on every coach currently in the NFL, but his book on Taylor is obviously pretty thin as the two have never squared off.

Belichick wants every rock turned over. It doesn't matter that the Bengals are 1-12. He craves as much information on his opponent as possible.

ESPN's Dianna Russini has been all over this story since it broke on Monday and offered up some interesting details regarding how the whole thing went down.

"A source tells me a Bengals employee was watching the videographer/cameraman who identified himself as a Robert Kraft employee. The Bengals employee kept an eye on that monitor, the shot was of the Bengals coaches and staff on the sidelines for the entire 1st quarter.

"The Bengals employee flagged media relations. Bengals security then interviewed the Kraft videographer. This was also taped. The cameraman asked if they could just delete the footage and it all be forgotten, per sources."

That last part is particularly damning as it looks like the person who got caught knew he was doing something wrong in the first place.

What's next?

The Washington Post's Mark Maske reported Tuesday that "the NFL hopes to move quickly in its investigation of the Patriots' video" and that "a resolution is possible this week."

Maske added: "One source said a consideration for the league is whether the video shows anything that couldn't be seen on TV or on the coaches' tape."

If the tape is released to the public, and if it's bad (zooming in on specific coaches), then expect all hell to break loose.

Also, because the Patriots already admitted some measure of guilt here, and considering they've already violated this rule in the past — they are going to get hit with a penalty from the NFL. That's for sure.

The big question is how severe that penalty will be?

Most people are suggesting simply a fine, but considering that the league fined Belichick a half million dollars AND docked the team a first-round pick the first time around — this penalty could ultimately be worse.

The real anti-Patriots crowd obviously wants Belichick forced out of his job for this, but it's highly unlikely Roger Goodell goes anywhere close to that far. Belichick is now one of the faces of the league, and at this point in Belichick and the NFL's history, exiling the greatest coach in the history of the sport would put a stain on the sport for decades.

Whether you think Goodell hates the Patriots or not, be sure that he does not want that.
